Expanding Student Dormitories

Maximize Academic Potential
A vibrant on-campus life, with engaging social activities and welcoming dormitories, plays a central role in creating a lively and inclusive environment that prepares students for success in the 21st-century workplace. Students who live on-campus have easier access to academic services and resources, socialize with the full spectrum of Israeli society and feel a greater sense of community. Living on campus is a big part of what makes the University of Haifa experience so rich. “Currently, the University has a limited number of dormitory spaces. There are only 1,100 dormitory beds for some 17,000 students – an unreasonably low number for the largest research university serving the country’s northern region. The lack of housing spaces limits our ability to offer the full university experience to the maximum number of students,” explains Prof. Jenny Kurman, Dean of Students.

The University’s leadership is committed to providing safe and affordable campus housing for our diverse student body and is especially interested in providing higher education opportunities to high-achieving, low-income students. To advance this strategic goal, the University is launching a campaign to build an additional 500 beds. The University has received partial funding for the project from the Israeli government. A gift of $25 million will enable the University of Haifa to build and dedicate the new multi-building Student Dormitory Complex in your name.
